

Legal action

Bringing a claim in (clinical) medical negligence in Wales

This guide explains your legal rights if you have been injured as a result of medical treatment and steps involved in seeking compensation through legal 'clinical negligence' action. Note: the law in Scotland is different. Please refer to our separate leaflet on legal action in Scotland.

Compensation (up to £25,000) can be paid under the Redress Regulations and that it may be appropriate to pursue a claim via the redress process first. For more information please see our website.

Contents

What is clinical negligence?	2
What action can I take if I suspect I have been injured by negligent treatment?	2
Limitation (time limits)	2
Instructing a solicitor	2
What are my options for funding my legal claim?	2
How do I prove that I have grounds for a legal claim?	3
What if I am pursuing a claim in relation to my loved one who has died as a result of clinical negligence?	4
Do clinical negligence cases always end up in court?	4

If you need legal advice about making a clinical negligence claim, you can find a wide selection of solicitors accredited for AvMA's specialist clinical negligence panel at www.avma.org.uk/find-a-solicitor or call our helpline.

The charity for patient safety and justice

AvMA is the charity for patient safety and justice. We provide specialist advice and support to people when things go wrong in healthcare and campaign to improve patient safety and justice.

For advice and information visit
www.avma.org.uk

Or call our helpline
*10am-3.30pm Monday-Friday
(03 calls cost no more than calls to geographic numbers (01 or 02) and must be included in inclusive minutes
or there can be a cost per minute)*

0345 123 2352

82 Tanner Street
London SE1 3GN

www.facebook.com/AvMAuk

www.instagram.com/AvMAuk

@AvMAuk

bit.ly/AvMAYouTube

Registered charity in England & Wales
(299123) and Scotland (SCO39683)

What is clinical negligence?

If you have suffered an injury as a result of medical treatment, this may be referred to as a 'medical accident', 'adverse incident', or 'patient safety incident'. This does not mean that the treatment was necessarily 'negligent'. Whilst it is possible that your injury could have been avoided by better quality care or safety measures, it may be that the problem could not have been avoided. The law only provides for you to recover compensation if it can be shown 'on the balance of probability' that your treatment was carried out negligently and that this directly caused your injury. In legal jargon these tests are called 'liability' and 'causation'. They are difficult tests to pass, and require expert opinion from relevant health professionals in order to establish whether your claim will pass.

Some examples of clinical negligence may include:

- Failing to diagnose your condition or making the wrong diagnosis.
- Making a mistake during a procedure or operation.
- Giving the wrong drug.
- Failing to obtain consent to treatment.
- Failing to warn about the risks of a particular treatment.

What action can I take if I suspect I have been injured by negligent treatment?

The very least you should be able to expect is a full explanation of what has gone on, an apology where appropriate and assurances that any problems that might affect other patients have been addressed. Sometimes this is achieved informally.

The use of formal complaints procedures (see separate leaflet -link) provide a useful way of eliciting further information which may also inform any decision as to what to do next. It may be that you are able to seek compensation by taking legal action if it appears there is clinical negligence involved. However, the legal process is only concerned with establishing what compensation, if any, you should be entitled to. Whilst this information sheet explains this process to some extent, you will probably find it helpful to discuss the possibilities of this with one of the advice and information workers.

The decision to take legal action should not be taken lightly. It can be costly, lengthy and very stressful to the individual. You will be required to go over what happened to you many times which you may find traumatic and upsetting. You will normally require the services of a specialist clinical negligence solicitor, as a clinical negligence claim is nearly always complicated. AvMA has a panel of clinical negligence solicitors and we can help choose the right solicitor for your case and monitor progress.

Limitation (time limits)

You must commence your legal claim within three years from when the incident occurred or when you first realised you had suffered an injury. It is advisable to take specialist advice as soon as possible. Do not leave it to within a year of limitation applying if at all possible.

In the case of children the three year limit does not apply until their eighteenth birthday, in other words they have until they are twenty-one before commencing a legal claim.

If the claim involves a patient who at the time of the incident is not running their own affairs because of a mental disability, the three year does not apply until (and unless) they get over their disability.

In both of these cases a parent or other person close to them can make a claim on their behalf (acting as their 'litigation friend')

Instructing a solicitor

The solicitor will need to make an assessment of your case to decide if you have a strong enough case for them to take on. They will need as much information as possible to do this, you can provide this by keeping a record of everything that is relevant to your treatment and any correspondence you may have if you have been through the complaints procedure. Also, keep a record of any costs or loss of earnings you may have incurred. The solicitor will decide if your case has a reasonable chance of success and should be able to give you an idea how much your case may be worth.

What are my options for funding my legal claim?

Your solicitor will discuss the best way to fund your legal claim. There are a number of options available to you:

Private funding

You may be able to fund the legal claim yourself; your solicitor will be able to advise you about the cost of bringing a claim.

Public funding ('legal aid')

Since April 2013 civil legal aid (public funding) to cover clinical negligence claims has been withdrawn. For certain categories of child claimants such as children who have suffered a birth injury, some limited public funding will continue.

Trade union help

If you are a member of a trade union you may be eligible for help with the costs of a legal claim from them.

Legal expenses insurance

Your solicitor might ask you about insurance policies you have, as it is possible that they might include legal expenses cover which could be used to finance a clinical negligence claim. Often there is a set limit on the legal costs and you may be expected to instruct a solicitor on the insurers' own list. However, you should always ask to be referred to a clinical negligence specialist (for example a solicitor on AvMA's specialist panel).

Conditional fee agreements ('no-win-no-fee')

These agreements are often referred to as 'no-win no-fee' agreements and mean that you won't have to pay your solicitor's fees if you don't win the case. Because of the complexity of a clinical negligence case your solicitor may require you to pay for some initial investigations to assess how strong your case is before entering into an agreement. This may cost several thousand pounds. You may also be advised to take out insurance ('after-the-event' insurance) to protect you from the possibility of having to pay the other sides costs if you should lose the case. Please note that the client may end up paying a success fee and a proportion of the insurance premium, if they are successful in their claim, which would reduce the amount of compensation they actually received.

These are complex agreements and your solicitor will advise you on this.

How do I prove that I have grounds for a legal claim?

Clinical negligence claims are often complex cases, for you to be successful in your legal claim there are two strands of the case, negligence and causation, and you must succeed in both:

Negligence: that the care you received fell below medically acceptable standards (note: care which is less than best practice may still be 'acceptable' in the legal definition and not 'negligent'), and

Causation: The breach of duty or negligence of the clinician directly resulted in an injury to you.

As stated you must succeed on both, it is not enough that you succeed in proving that someone did something wrong when treating you, you must also prove you suffered an injury as a result of that incident.

As part of the initial investigations, your solicitor will require a supportive opinion from an independent medical expert on your case. They will base their opinion on:

- your medical records
- your statement about what has happened to you
- any other documents supporting your case

If your solicitor cannot obtain a supportive report from an independent expert, then your case will not succeed.

Following an assessment of your case your solicitor will be able to give you a rough idea about the level of compensation you might expect if your case is successful. They will take into account certain social security benefits you get because of your injury (such as income support) because this could affect how much compensation you will get.

You can claim compensation for any injuries or losses suffered which were a direct result of the negligent treatment you received. This can include:

- Pain and suffering
- Ongoing treatment
- If you cannot carry out certain activities or hobbies ('loss of amenity')
- Loss of earnings
- The cost of any extra care or equipment you may require
- The cost of adapting your home
- Psychiatric or psychological injury

What if I am pursuing a claim in relation to my loved one who has died as a result of clinical negligence?

If the case relates to someone who has died because of clinical negligence, you can claim:

- 'Bereavement damages' of £12,980 if your husband or wife, or your child if they were under 18, died; for deaths on or after 1 May 2020, the award is £15,120; or
- Loss of dependency if you were financially dependent on the person who died or you were dependent for the person for services which now have to be paid for or someone does these for you gratuitously; or
- A claim on behalf of a deceased patient's estate.

Do clinical negligence cases always end up in court?

Clinical negligence claims rarely end up with a trial in court. Many cases are settled after all the investigations are completed and before legal proceedings are issued, and the majority before a trial commences. Both sides are encouraged to settle the matter quickly and to avoid incurring extra costs.

Be part of the movement for better
patient safety and justice

Support
AvMA's work
today

You can help make healthcare safer and fairer for all

Our vision is a simple: People who suffer avoidable medical harm get the support and the outcomes they need.

This vision is underpinned by four objectives, we believe, will transform trust in the NHS and healthcare generally and significantly cut the cost – financial and human – which is incurred annually in settling legal claims as well as dealing with the human costs associated with traumatic medical injuries and death. Our four key objectives are:

- To expand the range of communities we serve and so enabling more people experiencing avoidable harm to access services from us that meet their needs
- To empower more people to secure the outcomes they need following an incident of medical harm, whilst providing caring and compassionate support
- To eliminate compounded harm following avoidable medical harm
- To have the necessary diversity of sustainable resources and capacities to deliver

Ongoing donation from as little as £5 a month could go a long way:

£5/month could provide vital advice to patients and families via our helpline

£10/month could help train a volunteer helpline advisor

£50/month could help support a family through an inquest hearing

Your help could make a real difference to patient safety in the UK

Please donate today at www.avma.org.uk/donate avma

action against medical accidents

The charity for
patient safety and justice

AvMA is the charity for patient safety and justice. We provide specialist advice and support to people when things go wrong in healthcare and campaign to improve patient safety and justice.

For advice and information visit
www.avma.org.uk

Or call our helpline
10am-3.30pm Monday-Friday
(03 calls cost no more than calls to geographic numbers (01 or 02) and
must be included in inclusive minutes
or there can be a cost per minute)

0345 123 2352

82 Tanner Street
London SE1 3GN

www.facebook.com/AvMAuk

www.instagram.com/AvMAuk

@AvMAuk

bit.ly/AvMAYouTube

Registered charity in England & Wales
(299123) and Scotland (SCO39683)